2nd Annual Role of Sex and Gender in Clinical Practice

Friday, April 27, 2018
8:00AM - 4:15PM

Jefferson Alumni Hall
1020 Locust Street, Philadelphia, PA 19107

This conference takes a unique approach to patient care by zeroing in on sex differences in non-reproductive areas, such as gastroenterology, cardiology, and the endocrine system. By understanding these differences, clinicians will be able to tailor patient care for both men and women, avoiding delays in care and improving outcomes.

Covering a wide range of specialties, this conference:

- Focuses on how major organ systems function differently in men and women, going beyond a basic review of physiology
- Highlights differences in clinical presentation of common diseases in men and women
- Provides important information on varying responses to treatment options, looking at both success rates and adverse reactions

New this year! Registered attendees can submit patient cases to be discussed during the conference. More information will be provided upon registration.

Target Audience: Physicians, nurses and allied health professionals specializing in family medicine, internal medicine, and primary care.
