

The Role of Sex & Gender in Clinical Practice
Friday April 28, 2017

Course Objectives

At the conclusion of this conference, participants should be able to:

- Recognize various presentations of common medical problems, prescribe treatment appropriately based on sex and counsel patients more effectively about treatment options
- Differentiate between reference ranges that are generalized to the population and those that are sex-specific and employ this data in treatment strategies
- Modify the initial examination of the female patient to include health history of gestational diabetes, miscarriages, pre-eclampsia to inform risk stratification
- Determine pharmacotherapy based on gender effectiveness and dose medications appropriately
- Recognize precursors of adverse effects when they arise in men and women
- Assess their individual practice in light of the information and discussions during the conference, and identify specific strategies to implement as part of a continuing improvement process for their practices.
