JEFFERSON CME POLICY

Oversight of Financial Support for Participants and Faculty

Commercial entities may not provide direct support for participants receiving CME credit for the costs of tuition, travel or lodging.

Course faculty may not receive funds directly from commercial entities for honoraria or support of travel or lodging.

It is appropriate for commercial entities to provide scholarships for physicians in training and students. The accredited sponsor must be made aware of all such support and the award decision for such scholarships should be made by Jefferson, or if delegated, by the joint sponsor.

It is the responsibility of the individual physician to comply with AMA ethical guidelines in terms of their relationship with commercial entities. International attendees who do not receive CME credit may determine their financial relationships with commercial companies.
